Weekly Note 10.22.26

As it stands

MITCH CLODFELTER

OCT 22, 2026

Happy Thursday. I promised you all a note on some more specific re-ownership strategies and here they are. I'll discuss corn and beans, with a quick touch on wheat. Anything more specific you are needing please call or email, I'll provide contact information at the bottom of the article. It should go without saying that you should not enter a position just because it appears here. These are not recommendations. These are strategies and my own personal biases. Seriously, don't be weird.

Corn

ZCZ26 ~ Daily

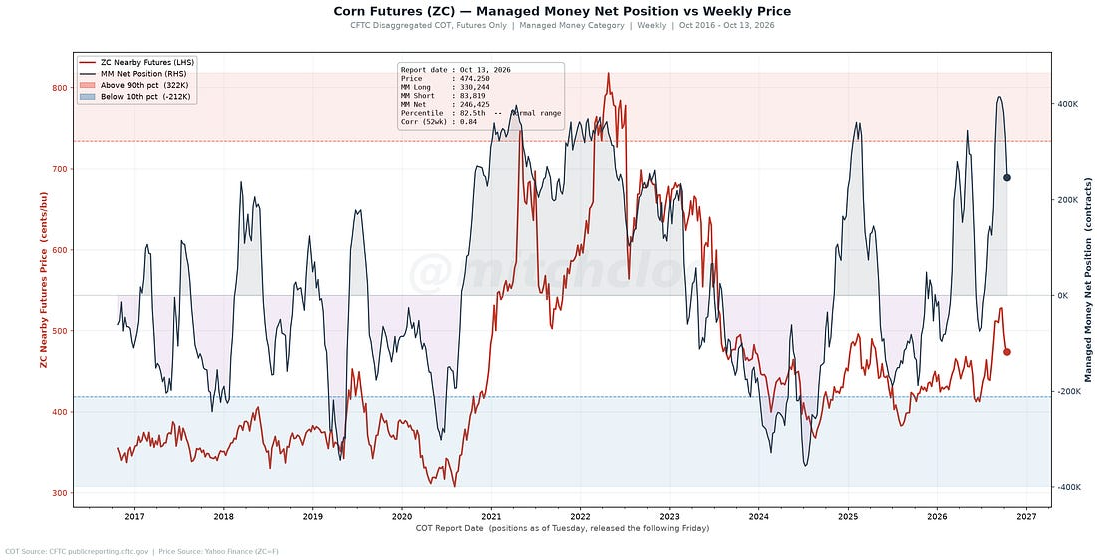

I'm over the December corn contract. You had your shot. Your options now are either to price it and move on with your life, or hold that basis contract and hope it goes higher in the next month. You'll need some fundamental factors to move your way for that to happen. Namely: a short crop in Iowa, a lot more rain delaying harvest further, or long term forecasts in South America to look worse than they do. You've got 39 days until first notice day on Dec corn.

South America: planting and peak harvest by crop

Crop	Country	Planting	Peak harvest
Soybeans	Brazil	Sep–Dec	Feb–Mar
Soybeans	Argentina	Oct–Jan	Apr–May
Soybeans	Paraguay	Sep–Nov	Mar
Soybeans (summer)	Bolivia	Nov–Dec	Apr
Corn (first crop)	Brazil	Aug–Nov	Apr–May
Corn (safrinha)	Brazil	Jan–Mar	Jul
Corn	Argentina	Sep–Oct (early), Dec–Jan (late)	May–Jun
Wheat	Brazil	Apr–Jul	Oct
Wheat	Argentina	May–Jul	Dec
Sunflower	Argentina	Aug–Nov	Feb
Sorghum	Argentina	Oct–Dec	Apr–May

I'm more interested in the spring corn contracts. I've started to own a bit, but I don't own as much as I want to. Given the selling of fund positions we've seen over the past few weeks, we could see the June 30 lows again at ~450. Moves nowadays are overblown. Remember who you are trading against. It's not your local merchandiser. Its not even the ABC's. It's C-3PO and a bunch of his buddies.

I’m comfortable with my positioning if it does get that low.

ZCK27 ~ Daily

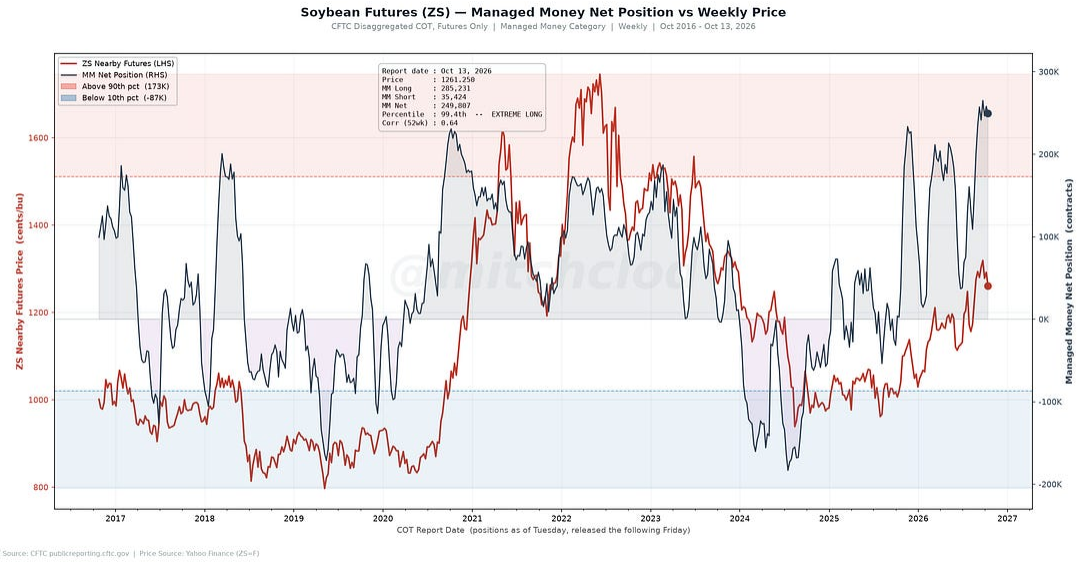

That is a May corn chart. I like the May contract as a sweet spot to give myself more time should the positions not work. RSI has entered oversold territory and we have retraced 100% of the August rally in May corn, so I’m OK with beginning here. I’m not expecting to take these off soon. I’m also doing this with options.

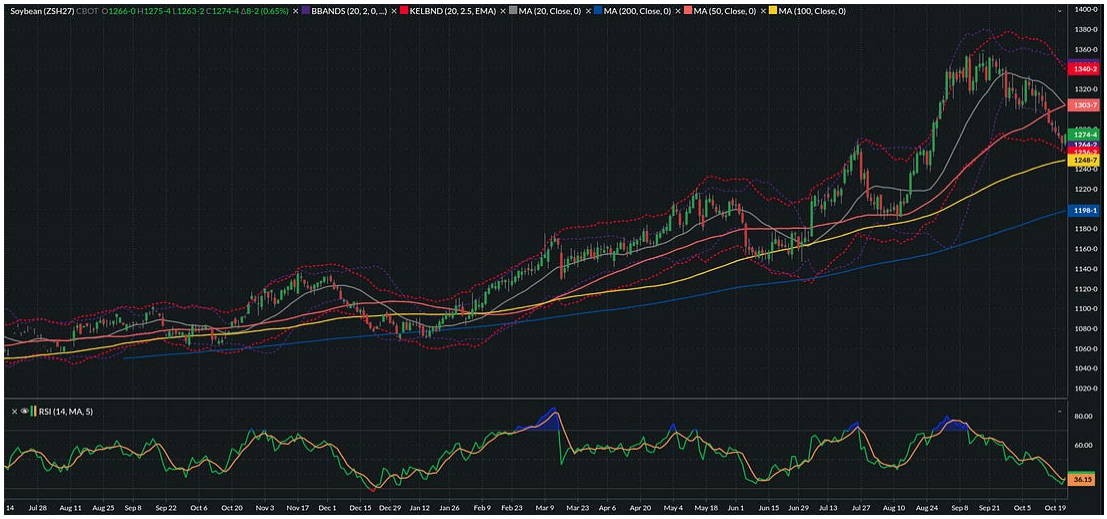

There are 183 days until expiration on May grain options. The May ATM corn calls are trading at 3.93c/month. I would rather they be closer to 3.5 or 3.6, but I can live it. They are still cheap enough to buy a naked call and not worry about a call spread or risk reversal (Buy a call & Sell a put). If you DID want to do a risk reversal, I challenge you to look at your delta. It's a cheap way to own a move yes, but your delta could be just as long as a futures buy, and that short option must be margined. I think you keep it simple with corn right now.

Soybeans

Legacy readers of this publication will remember that I have been a player hater on beans for a while. And I have been wrong. I just don't trust em. There's too many good bean fields out there this year. I don't remember an August where key growing regions got the rain they needed like they did this year. Where it rained, beans are huge. Where it didn't, they aren't. There is also too much length to come off IF Brazil beans are adequate.

ZSH27 ~ Daily

I shall not be touching beans here because I am inclined to player hate so deeply. However, I think if a guy was short beans this could be a good spot to begin lifting some of those shorts. From a daily perspective at least.

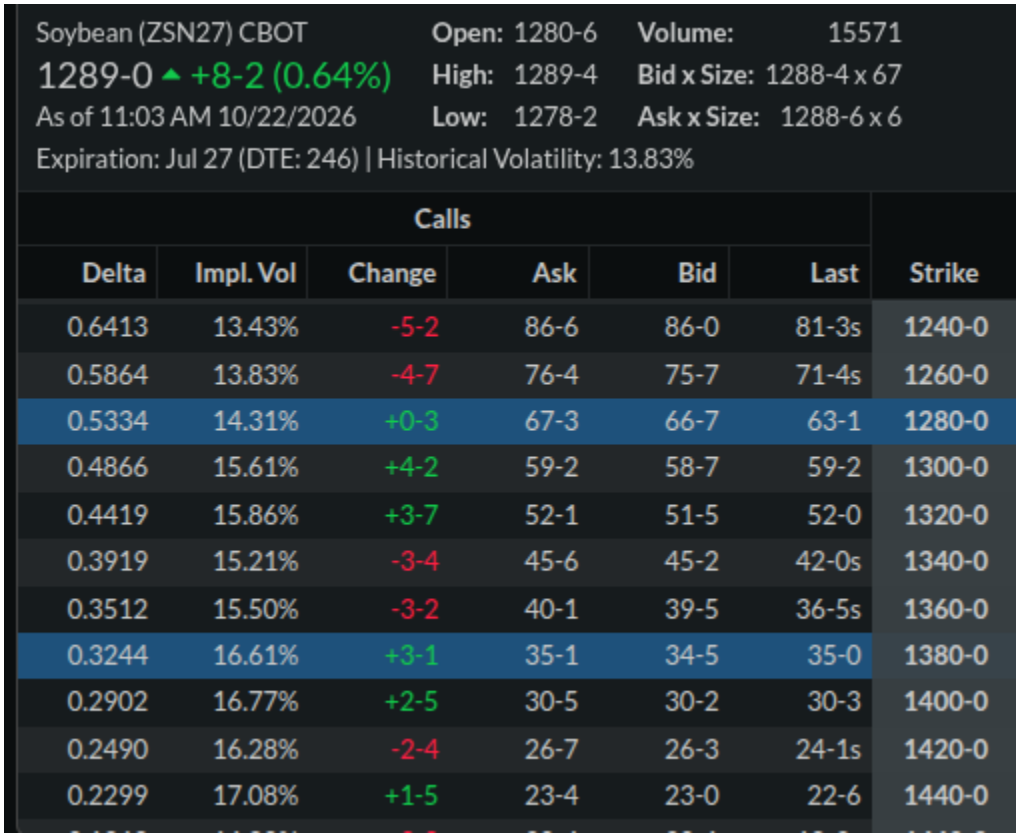

The weekly bean chart is a different story.

ZS ~ Weekly Nearby

The weekly chart has to hold the 20-week moving average at 1231. I remain a healthy skeptic until I see Brazil weather look a bit more ominous. Then I may finally stop hating.

When it comes to owning beans if you are so inclined I think you do so with a option spread.

A 1280/1380 bull call spread in July beans costs about 32c off this morning's bid/ask, and that's your max risk. Max gain is about 68c if July finishes at or above 1380, with breakeven near 1312. I really don't mind that as a way to cheapen ownership.

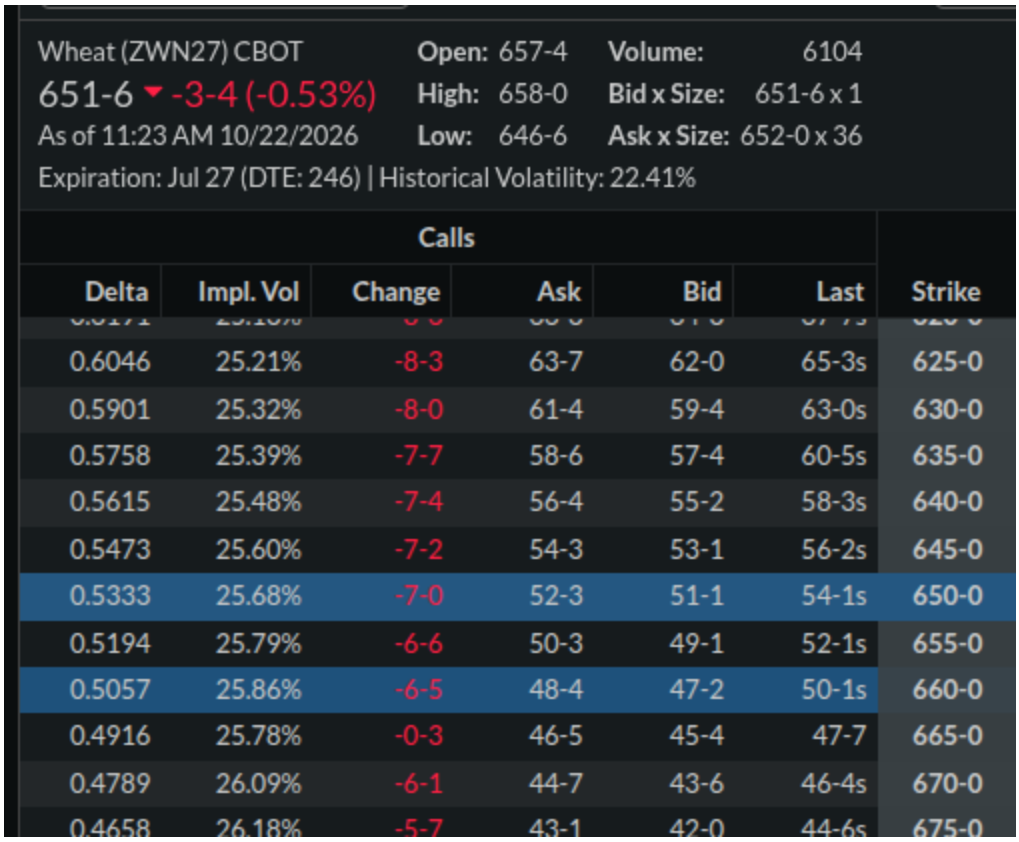

Wheat

July '27 Wheat actually looks pretty affordable here.

Fibonacci retracement levels point to retracing that 627 level now that we've broken support. The weekly July wheat also has support at ~624 at 62% retracment of the 2026 rally. I would look at owning some around there if we do fall to that level.

0.4658	26.18%	-5-7	43-1	42-0	44-6s	675-0

That option ownership is also affordable in my opinion at 6.3c/month. If we could fall to those levels I would actually look at a naked futures buy.

Conclusion

That is where the market stands at this time in my view. Short version: Dec corn had its chance, so I'm looking to the spring. Beans can prove me wrong, but they'll have to do it with Brazil weather. Wheat gets interesting if it pulls back to that 624-627 zone.
